Guidelines for Book Reviews

Book Reviews Editor: Dr Niccolò Mugnai niccolo.mugnai@uni-tuebingen.de

Libyan Studies publishes reviews of books on Northern Africa and neighbouring regions of the Mediterranean, focusing on archaeology, history, geography, and other subjects that fall under the journal's remit.

Those who wish to submit a book review should discuss this with the Book Reviews Editor in the first instance. Please be aware that we cannot accept unsolicited book reviews.

Book reviews are accepted all year round, with an average turnaround of six months from submission on the Libyan Studies Cambridge Core website to publication on First View via Cambridge Journals Online.

For house style and information on how to prepare your manuscript, please refer to the Guidelines for Contributors.

General information about book reviews:

- Book reviews should provide a critical assessment of the book's aims, contents, and its place within current scholarship. Reviews should not be limited to a summary of the contents of the book.
- Reviews should point out strengths and/or weaknesses of the book, without personal attacks on the author(s) or editor(s). If a conflict of interest arises, this should be notified straightaway to the Book Reviews Editor.
- References can be included in the main text of the book review where relevant, using the Harvard (author/date) system. A complete reference list should be provided at the end of the review. Endnotes can be used but please keep these to a minimum.
- There is no set word limit for book reviews – this largely depends on the nature of the book under review. Most of the book reviews published in Libyan Studies are between 1,000 and 3,000 words in length, including endnotes and bibliography. If you think your review is likely to exceed 3,000 words, please discuss this with the Book Reviews Editor.
- Libyan Studies publishes responses to book reviews, where the author of the book can address specific issues or respond to points raised in the review. Responses must provide a fair and stimulant intellectual discussion, without any personal attacks on the reviewer. The appropriateness of responses will be assessed by the Book Reviews Editor on a case-by-case basis.
